Why were we banned? // combo and the math people

shockedcrying71

hey, this is combo on the behalf of the math squad.
we'd to ask why we were banned on our first account (shockedcrying69).
the reason listed was spamming, and while I know we had a rough start on the forums with all the introduction threads we all posted without discussing first (we would've done one for all of us but we didn't think it would be a problem, but hindsight is 20/20), but surely the mods could've looked at them and the rest of our posts and seen that our intent was not malicious?
i'm not sure how the ban system works, but the purpose of this post is to request to be unbanned, and to have our ips unbanned. this ban doesn't only affect us, it affects everyone who uses the same wifi (namely my little brother), and the only wifi that hasn't been banned is algebra's, so i'm at her house right now.
in summary, please unban us (shockedcrying69)
thanks,
combo and the math people

You guys shouldn't have been banned. You aren't actually spamming.

You got banned??!!! Oh, you shouldn't try to get around a ban because you can get permanently banned for it.
I don't know how you can get unbanned, but I apologize on behalf of the forums for whatever misunderstandings that have occured.

There's also the fact shared accounts aren't allowed...

a) its already a permaban, nothing to lose
b) we aren't trying to get around it, just asking why and we'll leave if we're denied another chance
c) there's no specific rule against shared accounts in the full rules

Shrugs I've already told you. Mods ban shared accounts.

They do?

Oh, well, it's not like the other people even care about this account anymore, much less use it. They kind of just take up siggy space.

It seems that my IP address was the only one that wasn't banned- at least, that's what people on the group chat said. It would make sense since I haven't posted in a few days. Busy with real life- the usual.

1) We are not the mods. Are you asking us or the mods? Because the chances of a mod responding is practically nonexistent.
2) Mods ban people who break the rules. However, a lot of the time they're pretty bad at this, but my guess is when you first joined a bunch of people reported you, which got their attention. Why would the mods thoroughly search your posts? You broke the rules, whatever your intent.
3) Your little brother doesn't have to go on this website. He'll live with being banned from this website.
4) Library wifi?
5) Getting around a ban can result in more banning.
6) Can't y'all just talk to each other IRL or something?

Who are we to wonder where we're going?

Who am I to tell me who I am?

Let's take it back, and take in every moment

1) I'm sure we're aware of that. As for your question, I'm not really sure- you'd have to ask combo. Haven't mods responded to posts before? Namely the one about the forums losing their magic?
2) Yes, that's true. A lot of people did assume we were trolls. I believe that they should apologize if they haven't already, because we are clearly not trolls and that assumption that we are got us banned.
3) Nobody has to go on this website. We can all live without being on this website. It's just that we have fun here, that's all.
4) That's a good idea, but why go to the library purely to browse the inter-web?
5) My IP hasn't been banned. I'm not getting around a ban since my IP was never banned in the first place. (That being said, I don't think I've done anything wrong, so I'd be surprised if I was banned from trying to log on to the Wings of Fire Message Board again.
6) Can we talk to you guys IRL? Nope. I like the people here, that's all. You're all pretty cool, and besides, talking to each other IRL is tiring. Have you seen these crazy children?

Shared accounts are, in general, banned; the mods can't make an exception to you, because then they'd have to make an exception to the next person who does it, and then the next, and then the next, and then what would the point of the rule be at all?
I don't believe the rule is posted on the full rules currently, but it used to be (and in all probability it falls under the "be safe online" category- meaning not sharing account info). The mods probably should update it, but they're busy.
Speaking of which- the mods probably don't determine bans. There's autofilters and computerized things that take care of this; their team is quite small and given the hundreds of kids that come on here every day, they can't manage it all. Emailing them might get you a response, though- so you can try that. (The "Help" button will direct you to a spot where you can email them. People have done it before for accidental bans and gotten unbanned, although it isn't guaranteed.)
Also, a shared account actually wasn't nessecary. It's possible to register multiple accounts to a single email (hey, I've done it) and as such you could have registered an account for each of you instead of the one. If you are able to get your IP addresses unbanned, I'd advise doing that instead to avoid another ban. (Also, if you were banned for spamming, there's a perfectly good reason for that too- we've had spammers and they 1) fill the forums with meaningless and irritating posts, and 2) detract from the actual posts. The filters can't differ from a spammer and someone who was posting as many times over and over like that.)
Bans, by the way, are done to keep other users safe; it's not meant to torment you or hurt you. Again, hundreds- maybe thousands- of people use this website. The mods are humanly incapable of watching every single user, given that there's less than ten of them.
I'm sorry about your getting banned, but unfortunately in order to keep this place safe, banning is necessary and mistakes will inevitably be made. Good luck getting unbanned and finding a better way to get on.

About the banning; it's not always your IP Address that gets banned. Sometimes it's just your account. Your shared account was banned, so yes, you are getting around a banned.
